

In the emergency room, the parents note that the patient was born at 34 weeks gestation. He has been diagnosed with gastroesophageal reflux due to frequent spitting up episodes. He is not on any medications. The parents report feeling terrified when this occurred because it has never happened to him before, they would like to figure out why this happened and get him treated for it.

On examination, he is well appearing, pink in color.

Vitals include:

Pulse: 140 bpm

O2 Sat: 98% in room air

Temp: 98.4°F

His lungs are clear to auscultation

Cardiac exam is normal

Neurological exam is normal

Abdominal exam is normal

Skin, extremities, ENT are all normal.